

which follows the so-called "rise" and "fall." Cymbidiums are available which last perfectly at home in the living room. They bloom for about two to three months.

Cymbidiums are very hardy plants and are particularly to be highly treasured. If you help themselves to being fully treated. If you want to enjoy the flowers for a long time you must be sure to give the plant in a light, sunny place out of the bitter summer sun. Give it some fresh air but avoid draughts and cold. Water liberally, preferably with softwater or dechlorinated tap water at room temperature, but never leave the pot standing in water. Regularly spray the leaves but avoid wetting the flowers.

Flowering usually occurs in late autumn and winter after which the plant needs a resting period. Put it in a cool place and keep it there. This is the right time to divide the plant but only do this when the plant has stopped to rest. In summer it is best to put the plant in a shaded position. Keep it reasonably moist and give special careful attention to a strongly shaded position of lower plant level. The difference in day and night temperature promotes best development. Bring the plant inside as soon as the night temperature drops below about 40°-45°F. Put it in a warmer place when the buds have appeared.

Left: Cymbidium

Cymbidium chinensis

The first Cymbidium hybrid flowered in the British colony, Yacht, in 1846. This hybrid was a cross between Cymbidium chinensis and Cymbidium insigne, two species from eastern Asia. The flowers of the first hybrid are creamy-white with a yellow lip. They are in perfect contrast with the dark green foliage of the orchid which you get nowadays. But the first of British origin has as well been not followed by "Japanese" show plants. For instance are Cymbidium hybrid.

Cymbidium chinensis

Dendrobium

There are about 100 species of Dendrobium which grow wild in the mountainous triangle formed by the Philippines, southern Japan and New Zealand. These from the cooler regions flower usually in the living room. The plants which we see often are usually cultivars of Dendrobium nobile a native of the mountainous regions of South-East Asia. The cultivars have white or pink flowers, usually simple with a large dark patch on the middle. The flowers are borne in a branched panicle which forms a long stem but is so flexible that it often needs to be supported.
