

Questions & Answers: Crane Operator Certification

Overview

As of July 1, 2007, current crane operators must possess either proof of certification (as described in question 5 below), or a BC Association for Crane Safety (BCACS) document confirming assessment registration.

1. What is the BC Association for Crane Safety (BCACS)?

The BC Association for Crane Safety (BCACS) was formed in 2005 to promote the development of an industry-driven crane operator certification system in the province. The BCACS includes employer and worker representatives from many industries that use cranes, as well as representatives of WorkSafeBC and other government agencies.

The Association's constitution defines its purpose as:

- To promote accident-free crane operations throughout British Columbia
- To promote the establishment in British Columbia of a cost effective crane operator qualification regime that:
 - involves documented proof of competency
 - includes theoretical and practical examinations, and
 - is accessible and available at all levels of the industry
- To promote the attractiveness of the industry to prospective entry-level crane operators and the timely achievement of their qualifications
- To serve as an industry advisory body to agencies in a position to oversee qualification and training
- To serve as an advisory body to WorkSafeBC regarding regulatory matters and other issues related to occupational health and safety as they impact the crane industry

2. Who asked for the Regulation to be changed?

In province-wide public hearings throughout 2004 and 2005, employers, city councils, and others recommended that crane operator certification be managed by WorkSafeBC regulations.
