

An Approach for Teaching English Language Grammar To Arab Young Learners

Ebtesam A. O. BaSaeed

(Department of Curriculum and Instruction, King Saud University, Saudi Arabia)

Abstract: Because English and Arabic are not from the same linguistic family, they display huge grammatical differences. Indeed, some elements in English grammar are not even found in Arabic. Therefore, Arab students face difficulties understanding these elements, particularly the usage and function of the verbs be, do, and have and applying the present perfect tense correctly. This paper aims to help Arab young learners overcome these difficulties by designing a new method to facilitate and accelerate learning English grammar. This method depends on teaching each verb as a main part of a unit rather than as a small part of a grammar rule that is covered at the end of a unit, which may not serve the unit's topic. In this way, students can learn the conjugation of the verb as well as how to form questions, make negatives, and, most importantly, apply it properly in real life. Further, the present perfect tense is connected with the present, present progressive, and present perfect progressive in one unit or one chapter in order for learners to better imagine the sequence of time.

Keywords: Arab learners, English grammar, Foreign language, Language acquisition, Language and culture.

1. Introduction

It is clear from various research that native language has a positive or negative effect on learning a target language, especially at the beginning stages of acquiring the latter [12]. Learning a new language seems to rely on the grammar of the native language to some extent [12]. Individuals tend to transfer the forms and meanings and the distribution of forms and meanings of their native language and culture to the foreign language and culture [15]. Arab EFL learners commit inter-lingual errors more than intra-lingual ones [3]. Moreover, the principal barrier to the second language system is the interference of the first language system with the second language system. It is considered that interference is the result of CA and it causes errors [6]. In addition, interference (negative transfer) is the negative influence of the mother language (L1) on the performance of the target English language learner [15].

This effect depends mainly on the similarities between languages, such as those between English and French or Arabic and Persian. However, because some languages show major differences, such as English and Korean or English and Arabic, English should not be taught using a globally accepted sequence of restricted rules. Instead, teaching approaches should be more flexible and practical depending on the nature of the learner's first language as well as his or her culture and background [10].

Arab learners experience difficulties when trying to understand and comprehend the correct function and usage of the verbs be, have, and do, since there are no counterparts in Arabic [8]. As these verbs greatly influence English grammar, they are a challenge for most Arab learners. Further, the present perfect tense is completely new for Arab learners and this can become troublesome since they have no equivalent in Arabic [14].

Therefore, this paper suggests a novel approach to teaching the perfect tense and the verbs be, do, and have that is completely different from the traditional method. It is hoped that this method will be able to help young Arab learners understand and diagnose the perfect tense and copular verbs.

1.1. Methodology

1.1.1. Problem of the Study

The present paper discusses the difficulties that young Arab learners face when learning the perfect tense and when diagnosing the functions and usage of the verbs be, have, and do.

1.1.2. Objectives of the Study

- Facilitate and accelerate teaching English grammar to young Arab learners; and
- Develop new techniques and methods for teaching English grammar to young Arab learners.

Mohammed, 2018-01-15 Research Paper postgraduate from the year 2009 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics language English abstract The ultimate goal of most second language learners is to attain a native level of speaking They want to be indistinguishable from native speakers However for many learners this dream has remained a dream and has not come true especially in the area of pronunciation as native speakers usually identify them as nonnative speakers because of their accent A large number of second language learners believe that the main difficulty they encounter when speaking the second language is pronunciation and consider this difficulty as the main source for their communication problems English occupies a high status among world international languages as it has become the language of diplomacy trade communication technology and business Thus learning English provides the person with an advantage as an active participant in today's world opening new horizons to a better future English as an international language has been taught in almost all countries in the world In Arab countries English is a foreign language which is a compulsory subject to be taught in all schools from lower secondary to upper secondary schools Even in some elementary schools English is offered as an elective subject However we have seen that the proficiency in English of secondary school graduates still creates disappointment among teachers themselves as well as parents The unsatisfying quality of English in Arab countries of course is related to different variables I have tried to shed light on one of these variables here That is to say the causes behind the errors committed in pronunciation and grammar in English language by the Arab learners The importance of investigating pronunciation and grammar difficulties stems from the fact that it stands as an obstacle in communication However it is necessary in this research to find out why
