A Review of Research on Corpus-Based Academic English Writing

Yujia Qi

Abstract: Academic English is the main medium of international academic communication for contemporary scholars, and it is also the main genre of English writing in graduate education. The linguistic community has also emphasized the study of combining corpus research with academic English. In order to have a comprehensive understanding of the research trends of corpus-based academic English writing in the past ten years, this study compiles the relevant research papers on corpus-based academic English writing from 2013 to 2022 and summarizes the hot issues and shortcomings based on the overview of the literature and the content of the research. The study finds that the research on corpus-based academic English writing in China mainly focuses on teaching, genre, register, and interpersonal meaning and found the two trends of the research on self-constructed corpus and interpersonal meaning. Two areas for improvement have also been identified: the unevenness and limitations of relevant research in China.

Keywords: Academic English Writing; Corpus; Review.

1. Introduction

In recent years, the rapid development of corpus linguistics at home and abroad has led to the flourishing of corpus-based research on academic English writing. The development of academic English writing also facilitates bilingual scholars to express their opinions correctly and effectively in international journals, dissertations, project proposals, and textbooks. Corpora provide rich and authentic linguistic materials for academic English writing, thus giving rise to new research dimensions and methods [1]. However, compared with foreign studies, domestic studies have not combined corpus and academic English writing closely enough, and the relevant studies need to be more comprehensive. It's necessary to investigate this area's current state of research in the past ten years. This review aims to provide an overview of recent research on corpus-based academic English writing and practical guidance for teaching academic writing. Given this, to understand the current research situation of corpus-based academic English writing, the author has analyzed the research results in China National Knowledge Network (CNKI) with the keywords "corpus," "corpus-based," "academic English writing," and "academic writing." The publication dates were set to 2013-2022. As important journals in a field can often reflect the research progress and hot trends in the field, the author set the source of literature as "CSSCI" journals and then manually eliminated the literature that is not related to the research, such as book reviews, non-English academic writing, etc., and finally obtained 26 relevant literatures. This review analyzes the retrieval literature from the literature overview and research content and summarizes the hotspots and shortcomings of the current corpus-based research.

2. Research Methodology

This review analyzes the retrieval literature from the literature overview and research content and summarizes the hot spots and shortcomings of the current corpus-based research.

3. Research Results and Discussion

3.1. The General Publication of Relevant Research in China

The increase or decrease in the number of published literatures can reflect its development to a certain extent, as can be seen in Figure 1, the number of published literatures reached the maximum between 2015 and 2017, and since 2017, although there is core literature every year, the number is not as high as in previous years. This data is less than the number of corpus-based academic English writing papers worldwide summarized by Luo Qin, and this result of comparisons can reflect that domestic scholars do not pay enough attention to this field, and there is still a lot of room for China to continue to conduct in-depth investigations in this field [2]. From Figure 2, we can see the literature published in the domestic core journals, and the most significant number of papers is published in the journal Foreign Languages and Their Teaching, with six articles, followed by Foreign Language Word and Foreign Language Education, with 4 and 3 papers, respectively. Through organizing and analyzing the selected documents, we found that 21 documents used self-constructed corpora, and most of their corpus sources were selected from Chinese learners' English Master's theses, international journal articles, and English native language dissertations, while three documents used existing corpora, namely, MICUSP (Ädel&Römer 2012) developed by the School of English at the University of
