How is the ACT Scored?

On the actual ACT test, you receive one score for each section and one composite score that covers the three required sections (English, Math, and Reading).

For your individual test scores, you get one point for every question you answer correctly. Then, those scores are converted to a "scaled score," which puts your scores on a scale from 1 to 36.

Your final composite score, which is what colleges are generally interested in, is the average of your three required test scores. Optional section scores do not affect your composite, although many colleges still consider them as part of your overall application.
