To Frack, Or Not to Frack

The United States—like other developed countries—is highly dependent on fuels such as coal and oil that come from the remains of ancient plants and animals. However, the use of these fossil fuels is responsible for many environmental problems that include land degradation and the release of pollutants into the air and water. Natural gas, also known as methane, is the least harmful producer of air pollution among the fossil fuels; it burns more completely and cleanly than coal or oil, and it contains fewer impurities.

Due to advances in technology, oil and mining companies have recently increased their reliance on fracking.

of natural gas from locations that were previously so difficult to reach that extraction was economically unfeasible. As a result, large quantities of natural gas are now available in the United States at a lower cost than before. A decade ago, 40 percent of energy in the United States was used to generate electricity with half of that energy coming from coal. As a result of fracking, electricity generation now uses less coal and more natural gas. Since coal emits more air pollutants—including carbon dioxide—than does natural gas, increased fracking initially appeared to be beneficial to the environment.
