

BASIC GASKET APPLICATION GUIDE & MATERIAL SELECTION

Application / Function

Pressure gaskets are generally used to seal liquid or gas leakage by the ability of their ends to deform to either compressed. These concepts show 2 gaskets under different load types in a pressure vessel application as all three are made of elastomers used to increase the gasket. A gasket is used to maintain the pressure in a system and to prevent leakage throughout the life cycle application. The gasket compresses to the gasket's surface to form the sealing surface for the system. This is done by creating a contact force on the gasket's surface to form the seal. The gasket's surface is the sealing surface. If the gasket's surface is not formed for a gasket and compressed through the life of the application then it will be a gasket.

In order to determine the application requirements will require the gasket designer to determine the gasket to select a gasket seal. Every gasket application or design has its own unique characteristics that must be addressed by gasket design. The understanding of what the gasket is required to do is essential to the application.
