

The Bunker Diary, published in 2013, features the story of Linus Weems, a teenager who is kidnapped from the streets and then imprisoned in a mysterious bunker.

30 January 10.00 a.m.

1 This is what I know. I'm in a low-ceilinged rectangular building made entirely of whitewashed concrete. It's about twelve metres wide and eighteen metres long. A corridor runs down the middle of the building, with a smaller corridor leading off to a lift shaft just over halfway down. There are six little rooms along the main corridor, three on either side. They're all the same size, three metres
5 by five, and each one is furnished with an iron-framed bed, a hard-backed chair, and a bedside cabinet. There's a bathroom at one end of the corridor and a kitchen at the other. Opposite the kitchen, in the middle of an open area, there's a rectangular wooden table with six wooden chairs. In each corner of the open area there's an L-shaped bench settee. There are no windows. No doors. The lift is the only way in or out.

10 I thought he was blind. That's how he got me. I still can't believe I fell for it. I keep playing it over in my mind, hoping I'll do something different, but it always turns out the same.

You could walk away if you wanted to, I told myself. You don't have to help him. You could just walk away, nice and quiet. He's blind, he'll never know, will he? But I didn't walk away.

15 I coughed to let him know I was there, then I walked up and asked him if he needed any help. He didn't look at me. He kept his head down. And I thought that was a bit odd. But then I thought, maybe that's what blind people do? I mean, what's the point of looking at someone if you can't actually see them?

"It's my arm," he muttered, indicating the sling. "I can't get hold of the suitcase properly."

"Where do you want it?" I asked. "In the back," he said. "Thank you."

20 There was no one else in the van, no one in the driving seat. Which was kind of surprising. The back of the van was pretty empty too, just a few bits of rope, some carrier bags, a dusty old blanket. The blind man said, "Would you mind putting the case up by the front seats for me? It'll be easier to get out."

25 Maybe he isn't completely blind? I thought. Maybe he can see enough to drive? Or maybe he's one of those people who pretend they're disabled so they can get a special parking badge?

"Please," he said. "I'm in a hurry."

I shrugged off my doubts and stepped up into the van. What did I care if he was blind or not? Just get his suitcase into the van and leave him to it.

30 I was moving towards the front seats when I felt the van lurch on its springs, and I knew the blind man had climbed up behind me.

35 I knew I'd been had then but it was already too late, and as I turned to face him he grabbed my head and clamped a damp cloth over my face. I started to choke. I was breathing in chemicals – chloroform, ether, whatever it was. I couldn't breathe. There was no air. My lungs were on fire. I thought I was dying. I struggled, lashing out with my elbows and legs, kicking, stamping, jerking my head like a madman, but it was no good. He was strong, a lot stronger than he looked. His hands gripped my skull like a couple of vices. After a few seconds I started to feel dizzy, and then . . . Nothing. I must have passed out.
