The ITIL guiding principles

Guiding principle	Description
Focus on value	Everything that the organization does needs to map, directly or indirectly, to value for the organization. The focus on value principle encompasses many perspectives, including the experience of customers and users. Do not wait that an opportunity will arise unannounced without considering what is already available in the background. There is likely to be a great deal in the current services portfolio, programs, projects, and people that can be used to create the desired outcome. The current state should be investigated and explained clearly to make sure it is fully understood. Do not attempt to do everything at once. Start with a small, achievable outcome and build on it as you go. Organizing work into smaller, manageable sections that can be completed and completed in a timely manner, the most fundamental change focus on each effort.
Start where you are	Recognize the current state, its strengths, and what can be leveraged off of what is already in place. Costs introduced

Achieving desired outcomes requires resources (and therefore costs) and is often associated with risk. Service providers help their customers to achieve outcomes and to design, take on, and manage the associated risks and costs. On the other hand, service relationships can introduce risks and costs, and in some cases, can negatively affect some of the intended outcomes after supporting others.

Management and support management
Information technology, operational design, products, partners, and suppliers, which should all be considered to provide a desired value. If a product, service, solution or solution set is to provide value to produce a useful outcome, it is a product or service. Use the maximum number of these resources to accomplish the objectives. Always use customer feedback to produce practical solutions that deliver results.
Resources of all types, particularly only, should be used to the best effect. Continuous working, that is, fully automated and use technology to achieve whatever it is capable of. Human intervention should only support when necessary, contribute value.
