(Chapter – 1) (Variations in Psychological Attributes) (Important Questions)

(Class – XII)

Short Answer Type Questions

Question 1:

What are the critical attributes of assessment for a psychologist?

Answer 1:

Intelligence: The global ability to understand the world, think rationally and logically, and use available resources effectively to meet challenges.

Aptitude: It refers to an individual's potential to acquire new skills.

Interest: It refers to an individual's decision to engage in one or more particular activities in relation to him relative to others.

Personality: It refers to the strong qualities of a person that make him/her stand out from others. Personality assessments help explain a person's behavior and predict how they will behave in the future target, etc.

Values: Refers to a person's strength and enduring beliefs about ideal behavior. Assessing values helps us understand a person's general values (e.g. political, religious, social or economic).

Question 2:

How do psychologists characterize and define intelligence?

Answer 2:

For psychologists, intelligence is a key parameter that indicates individual differences. The characteristics of an intelligent person are sharpness of mind, quick wit, rapid learning, and the ability to understand context. We defined the environment as the ability to successfully discuss it. Gardner and Sternberg psychologists state that intelligent individuals not only adapt to their environment, but actively modify or shape it.

Question 3:

List some characteristics of an emotionally intelligent person.

Answer 3:

The characteristics of emotionally intelligent persons are:

- Perceive and be sensitive to your own feelings and emotions.
- Perceive and be sensitive to other people's emotions by paying attention to their tone, body language and facial expressions.
- Relate your emotions to your thoughts so that you take them into account while solving problems or making decisions.
- Understand the powerful influence of the nature and intensity of your emotions.
- Control your emotions and their expression while dealing with self and others to promote harmony and peace.

Question 4:

Please analyze the characteristics of the creativity test.

Answer 4:

Creativity tests are characterized by:

One of the most important features is the Creativity Test. It's open-ended, so you can come up with different answers to the questions and problems that come up based on your own experience. The Creativity Test involves an insane variety of thinking and the ability to generate a wide variety of ideas. The test requires people to use their creative thinking. For example, the ability to come up with different ideas about a particular topic/situation, different ways of looking at things, problems, or situations. New relationships between seemingly unrelated things, perception of things, the ability to infer cause and effect, the ability to put things in new contexts, etc.
