

Classroom Discussion/Questions

Read the following passage and then answer the questions below:

The English people, led by their Puritan members, had become convinced against the English King James the First that a republic would do better because the members of Parliament had no religious duties and were therefore better suited to manage the country. Some prominent dissent, some opposition, and religious leaders, including Charles I, were executed and the first independent of Parliament was created. The government would then be controlled by their leaders. The members of Parliament would have no religious duties and would be elected every year. The people would elect a Parliament and Charles II, the son of the King, they had overthrown, returned to the throne.

The next months Charles II, had returned, and his brother, James II, became King. James II was not elected. Later Charles I, the father, should have been elected, but he ignored the Parliament. The king's failure to do a job that the people thought should have been done, the same thing happened as happened there again. The government would be elected by the people.

1. What did the English people think about the English King?
2. How did the English people think about the English King?
3. What type of government was set up after Charles I was executed?
4. What was wrong with James II according to Parliament and the English people?
