1. The first step in the process of developing a program is to determine the objectives of the program. This is done by identifying the needs of the organization and the resources available. Once the objectives are clear, the next step is to develop a plan of action. This involves determining the specific tasks that need to be completed and the order in which they should be done. The final step is to implement the plan and monitor progress. This involves assigning responsibilities to individuals and tracking the completion of tasks. Regular communication and reporting are essential for the success of the program.
