Many adults find it difficult to talk about death with children and it can be tempting to shield them from the pain. However, children need clear and comprehensive information about an impending death (wherever that is possible) and certainly after a death has occurred. Even young children need an explanation about what has happened to someone who is important to them. Below are some tips for explaining death to children.

- Prepare yourself before addressing the issue with the child.
- Begin by asking the child what he already knows: "Dad is not here. What do you think happened to him?"
- Give an honest, brief explanation and use direct language about NOT going, asleep, lost, or passed away: "Dad died today. His body stopped working. He can no longer breathe, or eat, or feel hungry or cold. He can no longer see him or touch him."
- Young children need brief, simple, and repeated explanations. Don't be afraid to repeat the same thing over and over—repetition helps children understand better. Plan to have many talks about the death, discussing issues, feelings, etc.
- Answer questions honestly. If you don't know the answer, it's OK to say "I don't know."
- Listen to and validate the child's feelings, and make more (e.g.) "You miss Dad a lot. What do you miss most?"
- Invite dialogue about any questions or worries the child might have: "It's normal to feel worried and mixed up. What questions or worries do you have about Dad?"
- Don't be afraid to show emotion. If you grieve openly it gives permission for your child to grieve openly.
- Don't try to protect the child from the hurt, not talking openly about difficult issues and painful feelings shuts the child down.
- It is normal for children to think that they somehow caused the death. Alleviate guilt by repeatedly saying: "You did not make Dad die, and you cannot bring Dad back alive."
