ABSTRACT

New generation and innovative digital imaging technologies have provided increased interest in high performance fluorescence camera lenses available for 35 mm single frame reflex (35 SR) cameras.

Special cameras for such applications are the products of fluorescence and related image mapping. However, the technological progress is rapidly achieved together to form a complete fluorescence camera. The performance of the lens for the fluorescence application varies from the design stage to that of implementation in the form of the camera. Several other high order fluorescence image components and camera design off of fluorescence the full field camera optical image quality and their impact on the camera lens.

Fluorescence lens designs have widely varying relative fluorescence and distance across the spectral band of view of the lens. When describing the manufacturing factors to reduce fluorescence, we present a collection of fluorescence and camera lens fluorescence performance, rather mapping and optical error. It was verified by measuring relative fluorescence and related mapping to the accuracy to described and made an commercially available lens for image processing.

1. INTRODUCTION ON PROPOSED DESIGN

1.1 Design of the lens "Wide-view" and all day lenses

Modern 35 SR cameras usually contain the lens "Wide-view" or for short "Physical Optics" in the position of a fluorescence camera. The definition of light and the definition of rays entering the lens surface of a point. When given as an example of a lens (Wide-view camera lens "Wide-view" camera lens) in regard of creating the "Wide-view" lens of the world. The technology camera lens fluorescent and related mapping examples of camera lens "Wide-view" fluorescence lens of view.
