

WRITING LITERARY ARGUMENTS

Most of the research skills should transfer to your argument. And as you write, you'll find new ideas everywhere. But usually, you might discover them in one of a few ways: as you read, as you write, or as you discuss your ideas with the teacher. You'll also find the ideas you need to write your argument. You'll find a good one if you're able to identify a topic that interests you and that you can write about. You'll find a good one if you're able to identify a topic that interests you and that you can write about.

When you write a literary argument, you follow the same process you'd follow when you write any other kind of argument. However, because the subject of your argument is something you've already read, you'll find a lot of ideas to write about.

Planning a Literary Argument

Choosing a Defensible Topic

Arguments are persuasive only when you argue a specific, arguable claim about a topic. That's why you will be looking for a topic that you can write about. You'll find a good one if you're able to identify a topic that interests you and that you can write about. You'll find a good one if you're able to identify a topic that interests you and that you can write about.

- Topic Statement: Hamlet's journey to revenge is a journey to self-discovery.
- Defensible Topic: Hamlet's journey to revenge is a journey to self-discovery.

As you write your literary argument, you'll find a lot of ideas to write about. You'll find a good one if you're able to identify a topic that interests you and that you can write about.
