Abstract:

This research is a pragma-rhetorical analysis of persuasion in one interview with Nelson Mandela in 1991. It aims at identifying instances of persuasion used by Mandela in his interview before the presidential era of his life. Also it is meant to clarify Mandela's persuasive strategies used to affect and persuade his audience. To achieve these aims, Mandela's persuasive language is analyzed by the researchers to examine the extent to which figures of speech are utilized by him. Then, an analysis is performed to investigate the way that Grice's maxims (of quantity, quality, relation, and manner) are flouted by Mandela in using these rhetorical figures to achieve his persuasive goal. The analysis carried out in this paper includes identifying specific tropes: metaphor, pun, overstatement, understatement, and rhetorical question as persuasive devices. This paper is expected to be of benefit to show how persuasion can be created by using different figures of speech. Besides, it will bridge a gap in this field of knowledge by applying a Pragma-Rhetorical analysis through which Mandela's chosen interview will be examined thoroughly.
