Lesson 01: Recommended Development Environment

About PLCs

PLCs were developed to provide a means of controlling manufacturing processes using technology that was available in the 1960s.

PLCs were developed to do the same things that relay-based control systems did, but in a more compact and reliable way. They were designed to be rugged and to operate in harsh environments, allowing complex and changing logic to be changed easily without the need for physical rewiring. They were also designed to be able to handle more complex logic than relay-based control systems could handle.

Modern PLCs are much more powerful than their predecessors. They can do things like math and data processing, control loops, and more advanced control strategies than their predecessors.

The range of PLCs available today spans several orders of magnitude, from small PLCs that can control a few lights and motors to large PLCs that can control an entire factory.

One of the main considerations in PLC programming is the choice of the development environment. There are several different environments available, each with its own strengths and weaknesses. This lesson will discuss the different environments and help you choose the one that is best for your needs.

The goal of this lesson is to help you understand the different environments and choose the one that is best for your needs.

- Environment 1: Ladder Logic

This PLC is designed to be used for PLC applications, providing the most powerful and flexible environment for PLC programming.
