operation. For a better charge, you can use a higher amperage charger, but don't use one rated more than 1/10th the structural rating of the battery. Never leave chargers that claim to maintain the power of the battery in use in the house, as heat on the battery and gas damage batteries over a year's operation. The type of charging should only be used in emergency situations.

11. The average time necessary to charge a battery varies according to the maintenance that comes with the charger. As a general rule, a water charger will charge a battery in 12 to 16 hours.

12. Remove all the cell caps if equipped and cover the cells with a moist cloth to prevent splattering electrolyte. Disconnect the negative battery cable and look the battery charger water dispenser up in the battery compartment to position, regulate or regulate then plug in the charger. When used it is set at 1/2 with 1/2 to a maximum width.

13. If you're using a charger with a rate higher than two amps, check the battery regularly during charging to make sure it doesn't overheat. If you're using a three charger, you can verify the battery charge overnight after you've checked it regularly, for the first couple of hours.

14. If the battery has terminals left over, disconnect the specific parts with a hydraulic saw rather than during the last few hours of the charging cycle. Hydrolysis can weaken the terminals, but you can't remove them. Consider the battery charged when there is no charge in the specific parts leading to the two hours into the electrolyte in the cells is showing bubbling freely. The specific parts leading from each cell should be very close to the others. If not, the battery probably has a separation.

15. Some batteries with sealed tops have built-in hydrometers on the top that indicate the state of charge by the color treatment of the hydrometer window. Normally, a bright-colored hydrometer indicates a full charge and a dark hydrometer indicates the battery still needs charging.

16. If the battery has a sealed top and is built as a hydrometer, you can look up a digital voltmeter across the battery terminals to check the charge. A fully charged battery should read 12.7 volts or higher.

17. Further information on the battery and jump-starting can be found in Chapter 3 and on the back of this manual.

12.6a The main seal (1) on the main battery's terminal mount secures between the main seal (2) on the terminal mount (2) above; main seal.
