Segment Reporting and Decentralization

Solutions to Questions

12-1 In a decentralized organization, decision-making authority isn't confined to a few top executives, but rather is spread throughout the organization with lower-level managers and other employees empowered to make decisions.

12-2 The benefits of decentralization include: (1) by delegating day-to-day problem solving to lower-level managers, top management can concentrate on bigger issues such as overall strategy; (2) empowering lower-level managers to make decisions puts decision-making authority in the hands of those who tend to have the most detailed and up-to-date information about day-to-day operations; (3) by eliminating layers of decision-making and approvals, organizations can respond more quickly to customers and to changes in the operating environment; (4) granting decision-making authority helps train lower-level managers for higher-level positions; and (5) empowering lower-level managers to make decisions can increase their motivation and job satisfaction.

12-3 A cost center manager has control over cost, but not revenue or the use of investment funds. A profit center manager has control over both cost and revenue. An investment center manager has control over cost and revenue and the use of investment funds.

12-4 A segment is any part or activity of an organization about which a manager seeks cost, revenue, or profit data. Examples of segments include departments, operations, sales territories, divisions, product lines, and so forth.

12-5 Under the contribution approach, costs are assigned to a segment if and only if the costs are traceable to the segment (i.e., could be avoided if the segment were eliminated). Common costs are not allocated to segments under the contribution approach.

12-6 A traceable cost of a segment is a cost that arises specifically because of the existence of that segment. If the segment were eliminated, the cost would disappear. A common cost, by contrast, is a cost that supports more than one segment, but is not traceable in whole or in part to any one of the segments. If the departments of a company are treated as segments, then examples of the traceable costs of a department would include the salary of the department's supervisor, depreciation of machines used exclusively by the department, and the costs of supplies used by the department. Examples of common costs would include the salary of the general counsel of the entire company, the lease cost of the headquarters building, corporate image advertising, and periodic depreciation of machines shared by several departments.

12-7 The contribution margin is the difference between sales revenue and variable expenses. The segment margin is the amount remaining after deducting traceable fixed expenses from the contribution margin. The contribution margin is useful as a planning tool for many decisions, including those in which fixed costs don't change. The segment margin is useful in assessing the overall profitability of a segment.
